Letchworth State Park, area 13,300 acres, located 50 miles south of Rochester, N. Y. in the beautiful valley of the Genesee River, with entrances at Mount Morris, Perry, Castile and Portageville, is distinctive in having a natural landscape of rare quality and unique charm. The precipitous walls of the gorge with the river winding below, the plunge and the spray of the falls, and the forest cover of the brink and slopes make it one of the most notable examples of waterfall and gorge scenery in the Eastern United States.

A product of glacial blocking of the original river bed, its 17 miles of deep winding canyons and valleys present an inviting panorama at every turn. The river roars over three major falls, one of which is 107 feet in height and cuts farther, year by year, into sheer cliffs which approach 600 feet in height.

Within its boundaries are good restaurants, Glen Iris Inn, a Motel, camping cabins, a swimming pool, inviting roads and trails leading to scenic beauties, a forest arboretum, and a museum with records of the Indian and pioneer history of the region. A visit to this park is a never-to-be-forgotten experience for young and old alike.
